HIS 125            Ancient World Civilizations

This course introduces students to the main political, social, and cultural developments throughout the ancient world, spanning from the Mediterranean to East Asia. Students are expected to acquire an understanding of the important people and events that shaped ancient world history.

HIS 300            Historical Methods

This course introduces students to the methods involved in historical analysis, research, and writing. Emphasis will be placed on approaches to the study of history, modes of historical writing, interpretation and argument, data collection, analysis and documentation, and style and writing conventions. Students successfully completing this course will be able to write effectively, reason logically, and argue convincingly. This course is a prerequisite for HIS 427.

HIS 319            Atlantic World

The purpose of this course is to study the rise and fall of an Atlantic World System that tied Europe, Africa, and the Americas into a web of economic and cultural interdependence. We will examine different models of New World colonization by European colonial powers, the ramifications of New World Slavery, encounters and conflicts between native and colonial peoples, and the development of nation states in the Western Hemisphere. Throughout the course, we will emphasize comparative analysis of historical events and trends, examining how different peoples in different regions experienced colonization, slavery, trade, nation-making, and emancipation in the Atlantic World.

HIS 401            US Military History

This course examines the way in which the military is a reflection of a pluralistic American society, and the way in which this country's wars have been an expression of the greater society's view of strategy, national goals, morality, and global status. To study military history is to study American history, albeit from a certain perspective. Therefore, this course will not only focus on battles and generals, but will also explore the role of politics in shaping the military and conducting strategy, the impact of common men and women on warfare, and the way in which our national character has created an "American way of war."
