The ladder is to be removed in conjunction with the new building.

The plan is to construct a building for the business school and land next to the Gateway Technology Center to house the college’s business school. In a recent interview he provided an overview of the new building and how it will be integrated into the college's campus.

The class schedule has been finalized, and the college's planning committee is discussing the needs of about 1,300 traditional students for fall 2017. As far as class space goes, we'll see if the college can accommodate the needs of all of the students.

The president said he was pleased with the new building and how it will be able to accommodate the college's growing student population.

Student Petition Leads to Expanded Library Hours

A student petition was submitted to the college, calling for an extension of library hours to 24 hours a day, seven days a week. The library currently closes at 2 a.m., but the student petition argues that this is not enough to accommodate the needs of students who have late-night classes or who need to study for exams.

The petition was submitted by a group of students who said they were frustrated with the current library hours and that they had heard from other students who had similar concerns.

The library director said that the library will remain open, acting in response to a petition signed by 200 students. Provost Evan Duff said that the petition was not a formal request and that the library would not be able to extend its hours.

The library director said that the petition was not a formal request and that the library would not be able to extend its hours. However, Duff noted that he had met with the students who submitted the petition and that he was open to discussing the issue further.

He added that the library would continue to evaluate the need for extended hours and that he would keep the students updated on any changes.

The college's decision to keep the library hours as they are was seen as a disappointment by some students, who said that they were frustrated with the current hours and that they needed more time to study.

Will Cavalier Trades Lead to NBA Title?

By Johnathan Pickle

In the 2017 off-season, the Cleveland Cavaliers surprised the world by trading all-star Kyrie Irving for Isaiah Thomas, Jae Crowder, J.R. Smith, and Timofey Mozgov in a 3-for-1 trade. After the season ended, the Cavaliers decided to reshuffle their front office to get a better look at the roster. With that in mind, the final day of the trade deadline, the team shipped out six players, four of whom joined the Cavaliers team at the end of the year.

The first move was trading Thomas, Crowder, Mozgov, and six future draft picks to the Los Angeles Lakers for Jordan Clarkson and Larry Nance, Jr. who is a gamer. With Mozgov’s departure, the Cavaliers need a big man to fill the void. They can fill that void by the 2018 NBA draft. Clarkson brings them an offensive threat.

As a new number of the roster, Thomas’ minutes were reduced by playing with him. Another key factor was that Cavaliers coach Tyronn Lue wanted a spark off the bench. As a result of that, Clarkson has been given more minutes.

One of the main reasons for the trade was to get more depth off the bench. After the trade, the Cavaliers need a big man to fill the void. They can fill that void by the 2018 NBA draft. Clarkson brings them an offensive threat.

Bee Garden Established as Part of Honors Project

For the past year, I’ve been working on a project, which while small, will serve to enhance our campus’s resources. The project was called a Bee Garden.

The inspiration was from a friend who had added that he’d be hesitant to go if he didn’t think he was making a difference. A coincidental event was the recent research into the bee population problem and the quest for a solution to the problem, and the idea of making a garden for bees was born.

I reached out to our campus (Randolph College in Virginia) to see if I could get some help with the project. They were very excited to help and even offered to send me a mentor. I decided to take them up on their offer and worked with a mentor from the college.

After a friend began posting online about the problem, I decided to do something about it. I reached out to Dr. Jarrod Kelly, assistant professor of political science, and he was interested in being my mentor.

Dr. Kelly is a professor of political science and environmental studies. He is well-versed in the issues surrounding bee population and has done extensive research into the problem. He has helped me with the project from the beginning and has been a great help throughout.

Dr. Kelly first introduced me to the concept of a bee garden. He explained that a bee garden is a small area of land that is specifically designed to attract bees and other pollinators.

He also explained that bees are crucial to the health of our planet. Without bees, we would not have as many fruits and vegetables as we do today. Bees help pollinate plants, which is essential for the growth of many different types of crops.

He also highlighted the importance of supporting local bee populations. Dr. Kelly mentioned that bee populations are declining due to various factors, including habitat loss and the use of pesticides.

Dr. Kelly emphasized the importance of education and awareness about the importance of bees. He mentioned that the Bee Garden project is an opportunity to raise awareness and educate the community about the importance of bees.

The project is not just about planting flowers and plants that bees love. It’s also about raising awareness about the importance of bees and the need to protect their habitats. The Bee Garden project is a small but important step in the right direction.

With Dr. Kelly’s mentorship, I was able to start the Bee Garden project. I started by researching the best plants to grow in our area and the best way to attract bees.

I also reached out to local beekeepers and farmers to get their input on the project. They were very helpful and gave me a lot of advice.

With their help, I was able to create a list of plants that are best for bees and the best places to plant them. I also learned about the importance of water sources and the need to provide a water source in the garden.

The Bee Garden project is still in its early stages, but I’m excited about the potential it has to make a difference. With the help of Dr. Kelly’s mentorship and the local community’s support, I hope to see the Bee Garden project continue to grow and thrive.

I’m grateful for the opportunity to work on this project. It has been a rewarding experience and I’m excited to see where it goes from here.

Stay tuned for updates on the Bee Garden project. If you’re interested in helping, please reach out to me at plank@randolphcollege.edu.

‘Interview Anxiety’ Takes First in Festival

For the first time in its history, Wende Performing Arts and Wesleyan’s theatre department will co-host an interview competition this weekend.

Organized by the college’s theatre program and Wende Players, the festival will include two competitions: a ten-minute play festival and an interview competition. At the end, Wende’s programming director and three judges will vote on the winners.

“Any interview you do is a competition,” said Wende’s programming director, Sam Roth. “Interviews are stressful, and people are nervous in front of an audience. People can get nervous in front of an audience.”

The festival is open to Wesleyan students and will run from April 13-15. Auditions will be held in the afternoon on April 12th.

Wende Performing Arts is a professional theatre company that produces live theatre and music in the spring and fall. The festival is part of Wende’s annual spring season and celebrates the work of student actors and directors.

This year, Wende Performing Arts is organizing a competition for student performers and directors. The festival will feature two events: a ten-minute play competition and an interview competition.

The ten-minute play competition will feature student writers and directors creating ten-minute plays that will be performed by student actors. The plays will be judged by a panel of three judges, and the winners will receive prizes and recognition.

The interview competition will feature student performers and directors competing in a question-and-answer format. The interview questions will be provided by the judges, and the performers will have five minutes to prepare.

The interviews will be judged on a variety of criteria, including the performer’s performance, the quality of their response, and their ability to think on their feet.

The festival will be held at the Wende Performing Arts Center, located at 2325 Wende Place, in the heart of downtown Wesleyan.

The festival is open to all Wesleyan students. Auditions will be held on April 12th, and the final performances will be held on April 13th and 14th.

For more information, please contact Wende Performing Arts at (910) 555-1212 or visit the Wende Performing Arts website at wendeperformingarts.com.
